ELEVATING BED WEDGE FOR NON-ELECTRIC HOSPITAL BEDS

Analysis:

Electric Hospital Beds present a risk of self-injury to the psychiatric patient. Many psychiatric facilities have their own standards on the use of an electric bed, since suicidal patients can use the power cords as a way to cause harm to themselves and possibly to the caregiver. Limiting the number of electric beds in psychiatric facilities will help to prevent self-injury or suicide.

Fact:

The annual report of the NCI in the United Kingdom⁽¹⁾ covering 2001–2011 reports a mean of 6384 suicides per annum, of which suicides by psychiatric patients (defined as having had contact with mental health services during the past year) numbered 1605 (25%). Inpatient suicides (n = 161) were 10% of psychiatric patient suicides and constituted 2.5% of all suicides in the general population.⁽²⁾

But What Do You Do If Your Psychiatric Patient Is In Need Of ELEVATION?

Psychiatric patients can be in need of bed elevations for many reasons, especially respiratory alignment.
